During an open house event on July 11, health care professionals, policy makers, business leaders and local officials were introduced to the work being conducted at the WQI. Program themed rooms provided an insider's perspective on the Institute's cutting-edge research and practice innovations.

The Institute promotes quality improvement and practice redesign in health care and research that helps answer critical questions arising in day-to-day practice of primary care. Research and improvement work conducted at the Institute are focused on areas such as telehealth, health disparities, chronic diseases, and performance improvement.

The Institute is the first of its kind established in the U.S. by a Federally Qualified Health Center.

WQI seeks to reduce health disparities and improve health care delivery by:

- Training and empowering staff through formal coaching and the use of tools and techniques to systematically evaluate and make changes in the care delivery process;
- Conducting research on interventions to improve care coordination, pain management, and chronic disease management;
- Studying the use of innovative technology to improve the interface between primary care providers, patients and specialists;
- Engaging healthcare staff at all levels to participate in improvement work;
- Training skilled improvement coaches and applying state-of-the-art process improvement techniques to healthcare;
- Conducting weekly telehealth sessions joining specialists with primary care providers nationwide to improve management of patients with complex health conditions.

The Institute has secured more than $2.5 million dollars in funding to support research and improvement work in a wide variety of areas. Funding comes from a number of federal and private philanthropic sources. WQI collaborates with strategic partners including General Electric the Dartmouth Institute, University of Connecticut, Yale University, and Wesleyan University. Internationally, WQI works closely with the Sheffield Teaching Hospitals in Sheffield, England and Jonkoping University in Sweden. Additionally, WQI has published research in peer reviewed medical journals and presented at national conferences.

WQI's staff focuses on a wide range of topics relevant to primary care. Adopting patient-centered strategies and promoting the implementation of evidence-based care are among the top priorities. Research is cross-disciplinary, involving medicine, dentistry, behavioral health, pharmacy, and nursing.
